

3.0 Vulnerability Analysis

3.1 Purpose

The primary purpose of the vulnerability analysis is to identify the areas, populations, and facilities that are vulnerable to storm surge and to wind damage. Storm surge data from the hazards analysis were used to map inundation areas; to develop evacuation scenarios and evacuation zones; to quantify the vulnerable population; and to identify major facilities that are potentially vulnerable to storm surge.

Mobile homes also have been proven to be particularly susceptible to wind damage, and they should be considered vulnerable under any storm category. Other types of construction are potentially vulnerable to damage from high winds, but they are not included in this study.

3.2 Hurricane Surge Inundation and Mapping

Due to unavoidable inaccuracies in hurricane forecasting, the exact track or timing of an approaching hurricane cannot be predicted. Within a few hours, a hurricane can change its forward speed, intensity and direction, which will create quite different flooding scenarios in a given location. Because of this uncertainty, hurricane surge mapping depicts the "worst-case" by delineating the maximum expected extent of storm surge flooding at high tide, regardless of the location of hurricane landfall. Hurricane Surge Inundation maps showing peak surge flooding for the Maximum of the Maximum Envelopes of Water (MOMs) discussed in Chapter 2 have been produced for each storm category. The maps depict the limits of inundation from peak storm surge heights that could be generated by the four categories of storm intensity.

The Hurricane Surge Inundation maps were produced with the use of ArcGIS Spatial Analyst, which is a raster-based analysis. The best available topographic data was overlaid with the Sea, Lake, and Overland Surges from Hurricane (SLOSH) model water surface elevations to determine which areas were flooded and which areas were dry. The surge limits were then draped over the best available statewide basemap data and printed at an appropriate scale. The estimated depth of flooding at a selected location can be determined by subtracting the known ground elevation from the surge elevation at that point.

The Hurricane Surge Inundation maps shown in Figures 3-1 through 3-22 were used as a reference when creating the Hurricane Evacuation Zone maps shown in Figures 3-23 through 3-46 in the following section.

3.3 Hurricane Evacuation Scenarios and Zones

Hurricane evacuation zones are sub-areas of each scenario that should be evacuated to protect residents from flooding. They sometimes include non-flood areas that could be cut off or completely surrounded by flooding.

Hurricanes with unlike parameters can have very similar implications for hurricane evacuation. Evacuation scenarios are developed to simplify evacuation decision-making by comparing areas of potential surge flooding for each hurricane category. Where there is no significant difference, surge areas flooded by storms of different categories may be treated the same and evacuated as one scenario.

Evacuation zones are based to some degree on U.S. Census tracts, traffic analysis zones, or prominent features, and are a key basis for the transportation analysis. Evacuation Zones were developed by the USACE, New England District; FEMA Region I; and the Connecticut Department of Emergency Management and Homeland Security, in coordination with local emergency management officials, and were finalized before use in the transportation modeling process. These evacuation zones were used to estimate the evacuating population and number of evacuating vehicles.

Figure 3-23 through Figure 3-46 depict the hurricane evacuation zones for the study area. Table 3-1 shows the evacuation zones in each area to be evacuated based on the storm category. The following figures illustrate the zones and surge areas developed for the study area. These images are also available in the File Bank section as interactive maps.

3.4 Vulnerable Population

For the purpose of this study, the vulnerable population is comprised of people residing within the evacuation zones subject to storm surge and residents of all mobile homes, which may be threatened by hurricane-force winds. The tourist population varies with the tourist season. A low (30%) and high (90%) tourist occupancy rate has been used in each county for evacuation scenarios. Table 3-2 gives estimates of the current vulnerable population for the overall study area. Tables 3-3 through 3-6 provide a more detailed account of the evacuating population statistics and are illustrated in Figures 3-47 through 3-50.

3.5 Possible Evacuation Obstacles

Critical facilities are those that need special consideration for hurricane preparedness. Fire, medical and law enforcement facilities are examples of critical facilities needing special consideration and planning.

The USACE provided an initial list of critical facilities for each county. The primary list included fire, medical and law enforcement facilities with various data fields. The fields from the list used for this analysis included the facility name, street address, city, zip, and latitude and longitude.

Tables 3-7 through 3-38 list and Figures 3-51 through 3-54 illustrate the critical facilities provided by each county within the study area as listed below.

Interactive maps including each of these facility types for the counties within the study area are also located in the File Bank. Agencies responsible for hurricane preparedness of critical facilities should ensure that proper attention is given to the complex task of planning and coordinating emergency response for these locations.

In addition to the storm surge hazards, officials should be aware of the increased potential for wind damage to upper floors of multi-story buildings. Post-hurricane surveys in other areas show that extreme winds can inflict major damage to substantial structures, exposing occupants to life-threatening danger.

3.6 Evacuation Route Flooding

Evacuation route flooding can be caused by rainfall runoff and/or storm tide. Hurricane evacuations are normally timed so that evacuees can reach safe shelter ahead of the arrival of sustained tropical storm winds. Experience has shown that roadway flooding due to storm surge rarely occurs prior to the hazardous winds. However, emergency management coordinators should monitor roadway conditions and increase clearance times if the capacity of any evacuation route would be compromised as a result of flooding prior to ordering the evacuation.

3.7 Emergency Transportation Needs

Evacuation preparedness plans should consider all persons who do not have access to a private vehicle and therefore would have to rely on public transportation for evacuation. Local government should attempt to arrange for resources to meet the demand for public transportation.

Planning for adequate, special needs emergency transportation for residents in private homes is the responsibility of local emergency management officials, while transportation for those in health related facilities is the responsibility of the individual facilities. Each county should continue the practice of maintaining an up-to-date roster of persons likely to need special assistance. Non-ambulatory patients will require transportation that can easily accommodate wheelchairs, stretchers, and, possibly, life-sustaining equipment.

3.8 Mobile Homes

The location of existing mobile homes is also critical because it is recommended that all of them be evacuated for any storm threat that would result in hurricane force winds. Tables 3-39 through 3-42 provide a summary of the mobile homes within each evacuation zone and the estimated vulnerable population for each community located in the Connecticut HES study area. Mobile home parks are also illustrated in Figures 3-23 through 3-46, where applicable.
